dramatic action as Zora, Paula, Tanqueray, Iris and Camille, but nothing more fascinating has been seen lately than her devil woman; the woman Rudyard Kipling wrote about in his immortal verse, "A Fool There Was" comes to the Robinson Grand Christmas night.

George Backus has been engaged to play in "A Widow by Proxy" with May Irwin.

With the mysterious Brindamour, the original jailbreaker and handcuff king as a headliner, and Stone and Harris as added attractions, the bill at the Odeon theater for the last half of this week is a regular one. Not a minute passes during the time these entertainers are on the stage that there is not something doing.

Brindamour, assisted by Miss Helen Hilliard, presents his mysterious act in such a manner that his audience is attention at all times. People have seen others get out of handcuffs after considerable effort, but this famous artist loses no time in accomplishing in seconds what it takes other handcuff kings to do in minutes. His trick of disrobing himself of a coat with his hands securely bound behind him, in the twinkling of an eye, is proving a sensation, which is being discussed on the street.

The pictures for today include the fourth episode of "Zudora," entitled "The Mystery of the Frozen Laugh," a two part Lubin drama entitled "Was His Decision Right?" and Hearst-Selig news pictorial, No. 78.

Florence Nash, star of the Also release, "Springtime," has finished her film work in New Orleans. During the stay of the "Springtime" company in the southern city, Miss Nash was given the freedom of the city by the mayor. She was escorted to all places of historic interest by municipal orders.

The vaudeville managers are trying to secure Ellen Terry and Phyllis Neilson Terry.

Wallace Beery as Sweedie in "The Landress," an Essanay photoplay, exemplifies the truth in life that nothing is so much desired as when it is lost forever. Sweedie is in love with a tailor who is exceedingly fickle. When he thinks she is dead, however, he weeps and wails and wants her back. This is Sweedie's ruse by which she wins a husband.
